DESCRIPTION:

The two rowhouses erected about 1890 are located on the southwest corner of Hope Street and East 20th Street in northeast central Baltimore, Maryland. Each has two stories and two bays and are covered with formstone on the principal elevations which face east. No. 1932 is the southernmost of the pair and has flat-arched openings on both stories which are boarded. The cornice has been removed. The formstone is deteriorated around the windows and upper facade. No. 1934 has segmental-arched openings on the first story with small wood infill strips. The second story openings are flat arched. All windows and the doorway are boarded. The cornice is mostly intact and has a perforated design on the soffit of the corona. The north elevation is stuccoed and has two segmental-arched unboarded windows toward the rear of the house. A one-story stuccoed concrete block addition is located at the rear.

SIGNIFICANCE:

AREA: Architecture

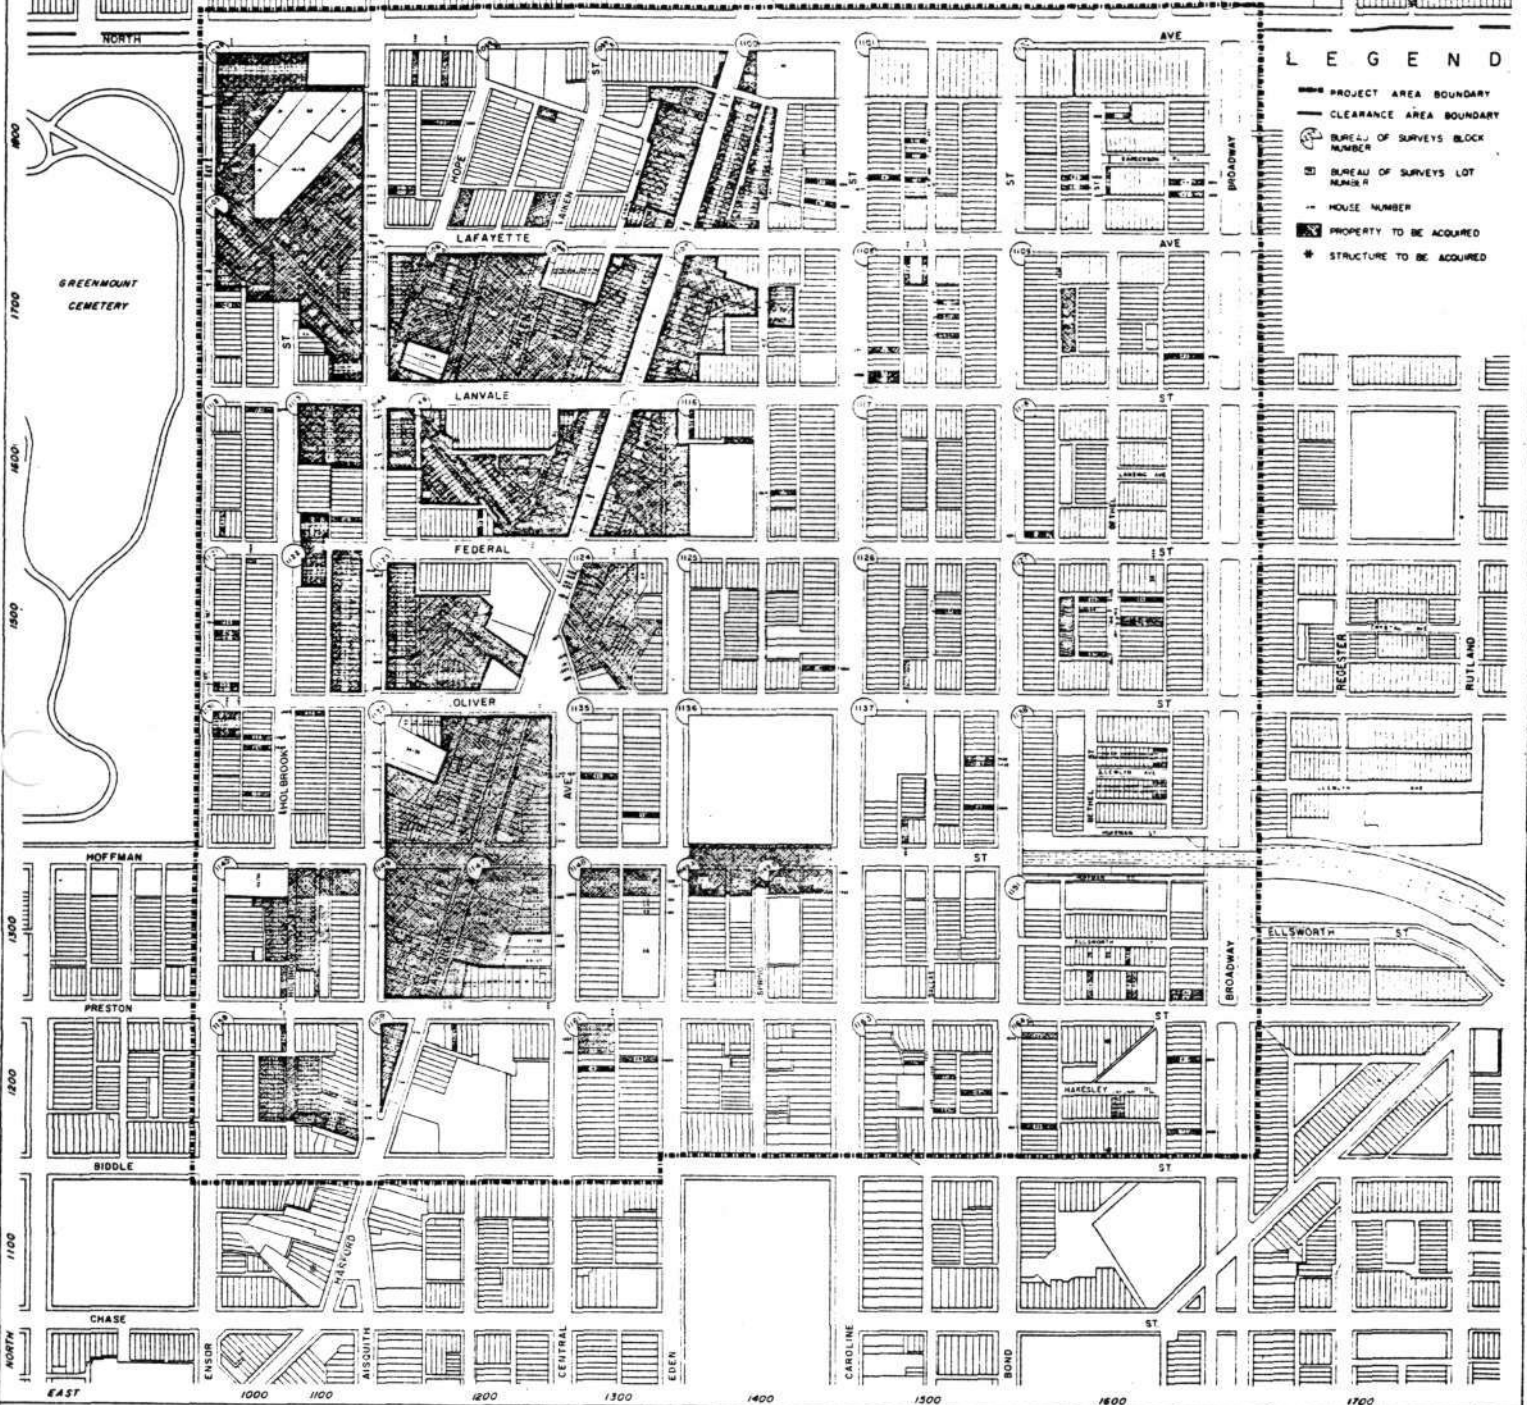

LEVEL: Local

Nos. 1932-1934 Hope Street are contributing structures in an undefined historic district along North Avenue which includes at least one block of the intersecting streets to the north. East 20th Street at the intersection of Hope Street provides a partial boundary, separating the 19th century residential district associated with North Avenue from a 1920's light industrial and auto-related area on the north side of East 20th Street. (See B-3942, 1925 Hope Street, for more information.)
